A lawsuit filed last week at the court in The Hague accusing the Israeli government of violating the Nuremberg Code by conducting illegal experiments on citizens through Pfizer has been upheld. A decision is now awaited.

Lawyers Ruth Makhacholovsky and Aryeh Suchowolski filed a complaint with the Hague Court last weekend alleging violations of the Nuremberg Code by the Israeli government and other parties.

The Nuremberg Code of Medical Ethics contains a set of principles for human experimentation that resulted from the deliberations of the Nuremberg Trials at the end of World War II. Specifically, the Code addresses the reasoning and arguments used to prosecute the Nazi hierarchy and some doctors for their inhumane treatment of concentration camp prisoners, such as the medical experiments of "Dr." Josef Mengele.

The Nuremberg Code was published on 20 August 1947 after the Nuremberg Trials (between August 1945 and October 1946). It contains guiding principles for medical experiments on humans, as during the trial several of the defendants argued that the experiments were little different from those before the war, as there were no laws classifying the experiments as legal or illegal.

People of Truth now filed a lawsuit against the Israeli government for Pfizer's conduct of illegal experiments on Israeli citizens. "The organisation includes lawyers, doctors, public activists and the general public who have chosen to exercise their democratic right not to receive experimental medical treatment (COVID vaccine) and feel they are under great and severe illegal pressure from the Israeli government."

Therefore, and in light of this, they demand that:

Stop immediately the medical experimentation and administration of vaccines to the Israeli public.

Call on the government to adopt all legislative procedures that do not violate the principle described above of a person's consent to medical treatment denying legal status in Israel and in Israeli democracy, including avoiding the creation of a health passport and providing the names of unvaccinated local authorities or any other relevant legislator.

Take the strictest measures against public, commercial or labour entities that violate state labour laws or other matters necessary to prevent coercion or application for vaccines, as well as discrimination against those who choose not to receive the above innovative medical care.

We would like to point out that a copy of this document will also be sent to the media worldwide for violating the Nuremberg Code. Relevant in all countries of the free world.

And as a final note, it should be noted that only recently a decision was taken in the Council of Europe on 27.1.21 instructing all authorities not to pressure or urge people in any way to take the COVID vaccine Therefore, what is good for the advanced European countries is certainly good for Israel, and the balance is self-explanatory.

Attorney Ruth Makhachovsky told Israel News:

"The experiment Pfizer is conducting in the State of Israel was conducted in violation of the Nuremberg Code, which is part of international criminal law and subject to the jurisdiction of the court in The Hague. Now we are waiting for a decision".
